We stress over the perfect lipstick, constantly critique our bodies and buy a new fragrance for every season. But is it worth the effort? Dr. Rhonda Fine, Ph.D., answers questions on what beauty tricks truly impress the opposite sex

Q Do women wearing red lipstick get more attention?

A Men don't really have an interest in bright lipstick. What they do like is the motion you are making. Men are extremely visual. So, if you are licking your lips or sucking out of a straw with a pale pink gloss on, that will keep their attention more than a red-colored lip doing very little. Angelina Jolie has attractive lips, but she always wears a very neutral or pale lip. And size doesn't have much to do with it either. Don't let all these injections fool you. Just remember to keep them moist — that's what gets men.

How much influence do eyelashes have?

The batting of one's eyelashes is certainly a silent, flirty attention-getter. It conveys sexual innuendo and hints toward a mysterious, exotic woman. Men think, if the eyes could speak, what would they say? What do they want?

Can you name a few ways to enhance a sexual experience?

Massages and oils are great because they focus on touch — especially if you massage the feet. Every part of the foot has a corresponding point. For example, to stimulate inner sex organs, press the fleshy area between the anklebone and the heel (on both the inner and outer sides). Then, work your way across the top of the foot.

Physically, what are most men initially drawn to when seeing someone of the opposite sex?

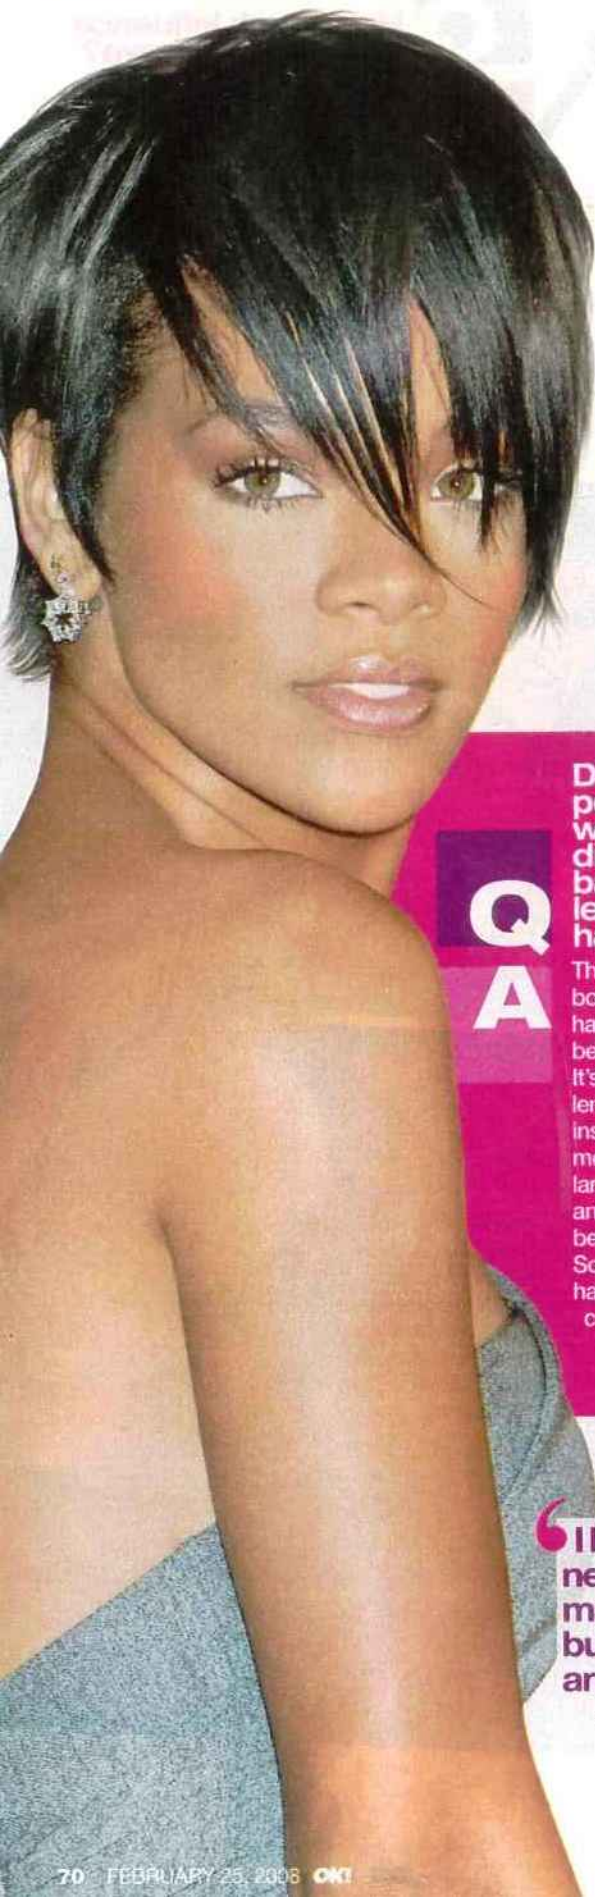

It is very individual. When people joke and say he's a boob guy or a butt guy, these preferences really are true. Men go with what makes them feel welcome. They look at these features as inviting cues.

Do men perceive women differently based on length of hair?

This is all across-the-board: Typically, long hair is associated with being more desirable. It's not so much the length of your hair but instead, how you move. It's your body language. It gives men an idea of what might be coming next. Someone with short hair, like Rihanna, who carries herself very well, is definitely considered sexy.

I love my hair. It needs a lot of maintenance, but it's quick and easy.

Do scents really attract the opposite sex? Which ones work best?

Everyone has their own scent — nature's perfume so to speak — called pheromones. Whatever you wear should not be very strong, but mix well with your body's natural chemicals. Figure out what fragrance works for you and what smells your guy likes. He may be into fruity or floral, musk or citrus scents.

What areas of the body do you recommend spraying with fragrance?

Behind the neck, on your cleavage and, if you're a feet person, on your toes.

When it comes to makeup, we are told to accentuate either our eyes or lips — which do men prefer?

Each person has a template of what they like. To be safe, wear a smoky eye one night and then switch it up and accent your lips a different night. Eventually you will find out what he likes, or just simply ask. Always make sure your gloss tastes good. Men don't like the lipstick that women like — the ones that stay on all day — because it gets all over them and doesn't taste as nice.

What are natural aphrodisiacs?

Things like chocolate and oysters have ingredients that enhance libido and increase desire, but this doesn't work for everyone. The best libido enhancer is between your ears. The brain's interpretation of events is the key. Set the mood with what you enjoy as a couple. If your partner likes lavender and the entire room smells like it, this connects with the mind that he will have a good night. The intention, mood and music all coupled together with what you enjoy enhances your experience.

A lot of guys tell their girlfriends they look better without makeup. Do they really mean it?

If you trust him, and he says you look better natural, why wouldn't he mean it? This doesn't mean you have to go bare-faced all the time, but I'm sure if Jay-Z liked his girlfriend Beyoncé with a little less makeup she would do him the favor every once in a while.
